THE GREAT CONTEST.

It can hardly be hoped that the Legislature will settle down to business and give strict attention to the interests of the State until the Senatorial wrangle is over with.
Just now there is nothing thought of at Madison but the Senatorial question. It is superimposed in everybody's mind. It is the all-engrossing topic of conversation on the streets, in the hotels and boarding houses, in the lobbies of the Legislative chambers, in bar-rooms, and in private houses. The contest is so much characterized by intensity of feeling among the candidates and their friends, that it will block the wheels of legislation, and until the battle is fought and the question decided, the Legislature can not assume a business air and proceed to consider the very worthy suggestions made in Governor Smith's message.

The scenes now being enacted at Madison have not been witnessed in this State since the winter of 1861 when Senator Howe was elected for the first time. The struggle then was bitter and long continued. But in interest, the present contest exceeds anything of the kind we have had in the history of the State. The prominence of the three candidates, especially of Carpenter and Howe, the former being recognized as the foremost lawyer in the land, and the latter having sat in the Senate Chamber full eighteen years, attaches to the struggle a deep interest which is felt in other States besides Wisconsin. Like the fight now going on in Illinois, it is watched with no little concern by every State in the Union. There are no new developments which tend to point to the successful candidate. Since the members of the Legislature assembled at Madison, and the drift of sentiment among them can be more clearly ascertained, it is quite evident that Mr. Keyes has not the great strength which his friends for the past month have given him.
Looking at the question dispassionately, and forming an opinion based on the actual condition of the Legislative mind, we should be compelled to state that at the present time the strength of each of the three candidates does not widely differ. Probably there was a time, and within the past few weeks, when Mr. Keyes led the other candidates, but since the Legislature has convened, and wild speculations have given place to the earnest work of making a thorough canvass, the condition of things has materially altered. Carpenter is on the gain, and Howe's strength seems to be steadfast.

It is not at all likely that a nomination will be made on the night of the first caucus. The question is too mixed for a settlement in a few hours. The friends of each are persistent and will not yield without a desperate struggle. For this reason, it is idle to conjecture at this writing. The dark horse is a mystery, notwithstanding the Keyes men are bold, and seem to express so much confidence of success. There is a hopeful sign at present that the Senatorial mantle will not fall on one who is not worthy to receive it. There is a strong moral sentiment in the State against any man who will not dignify the Senate and honor the people of Wisconsin. They want a man of conspicuous ability, of all the sterling qualities which go to make up a Senator who would command the respect of the Senators and the attention of the country. In view of this fact, the members of the Legislature should pay no attention to the log rollers, to them who seek to prostitute the high office for gain for themselves and friends, but to vote the sentiment of the people selecting a man who in all respects will challenge the admiration of all honorable men.

THE DEATH RATE IN CITIES.
The New York Health Department has recently prepared a table in relation to the death-rate in proportion to population of the leading cities of this country and Europe. The table will prove of special interest because it shows that the principal cities in the United States are on the whole more healthy than the great cities of Europe. The death rate in proportion to the population in this country is as follows:

American Cities.	Population.	Death Rate.
New York	1,000,000	21.30
Philadelphia	551,360	18.81
Boston	347,830	21.43
Baltimore	240,930	18.42
St. Louis	420,000	17.80
Boston	355,000	21.53
Baltimore	255,000	21.71
San Francisco	300,000	17.35
Cincinnati	280,000	15.81
New Orleans	210,000	31.18
Washington	160,000	23.64
Pittsburg	145,000	23.54
Providence	100,000	14.88
Charleston	57,000	31.84

It will be observed that the healthiest cities in the United States are Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Philadelphia. The heaviest death rates are in Charleston, Washington, Baltimore, and New Orleans. But the death rates in the South are not so great as one might very naturally suppose considering the malarial diseases and the epidemics to which the South is more subjected than the North. It has been suggested that the general mortality in the Southern States is much greater than in the Northern, but outside a few of the leading cities, the rates of mortality are no greater than in the North. The death-rates in the principal cities of Europe are given as follows, and as a comparison with those of the cities in the United States, the table will not fail to be profitable for consultation.

European Cities.	Population.	Death Rate.
London	3,333,484	21.79
Paris	2,871,792	26.32
Berlin	941,343	20.08
Vienna	501,548	24.84
St. Petersburg	215,551	34.73
Liverpool	507,385	26.08
Hamburg	377,497	27.28
Birmingham	347,387	27.01
Manchester	339,243	27.31
Dublin	314,460	27.02
Edinburgh	252,082	27.02
Toronto	225,664	25.84
Chicago	140,251	22.26
Copenhagen	120,878	22.59
Calcutta	429,335	31.80
Havana	250,000	40.97
Sancti Spiritus	200,000	41.00
Alexandria	212,034	43.00

DEFALCATION.

The Dodge County Treasurer a De-faulter in the Sum of $22,000.

WATERTOWN, Wis., Jan. 9.—The Committee of the Dodge County Board of Supervisors to settle with O. W. Trayner, late County Treasurer, have finished their labors, and report in substance that, in addition to the defalcation of $16,000 occurring in the years 1875-76-77, and reported to the Board last June, there is a further defalcation during the year 1878 amounting to nearly $6,000, making the total defalcation of Trayner for the four years in the neighborhood of $22,000.

MURDER.

A Brutal Father Murders His Son Near Avoca—How He Concealed His Guilt.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 10.—At Avoca, Wisconsin, Wednesday, an examination was held over the body of Henry Doty, aged 18, recently found in the Wisconsin River. It appeared the father of the boy was a hard character, who, when enraged, was in the habit of whipping the boy terribly. The evidence showed that the father struck the boy on the head with some weapon, killing him. He then, fearing detection, shot a pistol ball through the head, and to give the appearance of suicide, threw the body and pistol into the river. The father and a nephew named Wilson Doty, are in jail at Dodgeville.

GRAIN BLOCKADE.

The Milwaukee Elevator Full of Grain—A Blockade of Grain.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 9.—An unusually novel feature of a grain blockade exists in Milwaukee at present, mainly in connection with receipts over the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. Four elevators that take wheat brought to the city by this road, are full, and to-day at least 200 cars were standing on side-tracks with no room in the elevators for their contents. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul elevators have barely sufficient room left for the daily receipts over their lines, and consequently cannot take any Northwestern Road wheat. There are few shipments by all-rail routes to the seaboard because of the snow blockade at the East, and the Grand Haven route is closed to shipments by the ice blockade on the east shore. All effort is being made to get vessels chartered a week ago to the Northwestern elevators for the purpose of relieving the pressure, with little prospect of success. Unless shipments Eastward can be made soon, all the roads will have to stop the delivery of grain, particularly of wheat, here.

BIGGINS VS. GRANT.

The Case of a Lunatic Against the Ex-President of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The absurd case of Biggins, the lunatic, against General Grant, for false imprisonment, was tried but not concluded to-day. A good jury was secured, and after the case was opened Biggins was placed upon the stand. He said that in 1874 General Grant agreed to pay him $17,000 for having alienated the affections of his lady love, and being prohibited from entering the White House, he pursued General Grant on the street several times and demanded his money.
For this he was confined in the insane asylum and sent to Europe.

A Washington detective then testified that he was called to the White House to arrest an insane man, a service he had been called on to perform, and the President told him of one who was continually annoying him in his walks, demanding a large sum of money and threatening his life if he did not pay it. The detective followed the President out and caught the man, whom he arrested and took to the station house. While there Biggins made a statement similar to that he testified to,
and declared that the President was in the habit of entering his bed room by the keyhole every night, and annoying him while he slept. He made other equally absurd statements. Physicians were called on, who examined Biggins and pronounced him insane. Papers were made out, and he was committed to the insane asylum.
Employees of the asylum then testified that they always considered Biggins insane, but harmless except in this mania about President Grant. He was a spiritualist, and believed that the President had a spiritual influence over his spiritual affinity, but Biggins wanted to go to his home in Ireland, and was released from the asylum on condition that he would go there. It was believed by the physicians that a sea voyage, change of atmosphere, and absence from Washington would be more beneficial to him than treatment in the institution.

SPECIAL ELECTION.

The Special Election for Senator in Jefferson County—The Candidates.

WATERTOWN, Wis., Jan. 9.—A special election to fill the vacancy in this (the Twenty-third) Senatorial district, occasioned by the death of Senator-elect Charles H. Phillips, will be held on Tuesday, Jan. 21. The Democrats have called their Convention to nominate a candidate for Senator on Thursday next, Jan. 16.
Thus far the Republicans have made no move towards calling a Convention. Notwithstanding Mr. Phillips was elected in November as a Republican by 1,465 majority, the Democrats feel sanguine of carrying the District at this time, intending to put a better foot forward than they did before, and select a man of more popularity with the people than the last candidate proved to be. All things being equal, the Democrats are good for over 1,000 majority in the district. It seems doubtful if the Republicans will make much of a contest, preferring to allow the election to go by default rather than undertake a vigorous campaign.

The Democratic candidates are by no means scarce, and every hour, almost, new names are added to the list. Among those mentioned are H. S. Howell, H. Mulberger, and F. P. Brook, of Watertown; W. S.
Greene, of Millard; H. J. Ball, Palmyra; W. W. Woodman, Farmington; W. W.
Reed, Jefferson; W. L. Hoskins, Lake Mills, and a host of others.

ONE HUNDRED VS. TEN THOUSAND.

A Thrilling Sketch.
One evening in December, Joseph Douglass, a merchant of wealth and standing, doing business on Market street, Philadelphia, did not return to his home at the usual hour. After making liberal allowance for overcrowded and belated street cars, unexpected calls and unusual interruptions, he still failed to put in appearance, and the uneasiness of his family grew into misgiving and alarm.
His family consisted of his wife and daughter Esther; the latter home for the holidays from a boarding school. She was a sweet petite girl, affectionately fond of her parents, and so unquestioningly indulged by her fond old father that she verily believed if she had requested him to buy the Empire of Great Britain he would have drawn his check for the amount demanded, chuckled her under the chin, and told her to be a good little girl as he tossed the bit of paper to her.

Douglass, besides this, had two grown up sons, Bob and Frank, who were splendid fellows, keen witted, good tempered and smart as any parent could wish. They had received every advantage possible, and they had used it all, with an intelligence and appreciation which produced its inevitable result. Bob was a lawyer in Harrisburg, where he had already won a good many cases and considerable reputation, with a brilliant future in prospective.
Frank's remarkable mathematical skill, as well as a certain intuition in the way of judging of risks and peculiar ventures, had drawn him to the position of actuary in a prominent life insurance company.
Of course, he received a handsome salary, and if he only could have felt certain, each night upon lying down, that when he woke on the morrow it would not be to find the company gone to the bow-wows, he would have been happy.
His financial ability had also secured an offer of the cashiership of a savings bank.
But Frank's mathematical explorations proved that the ratio of bursting to smith-creens between the life insurance companies and the savings banks were about equal, with a gradual increase per cent. in favor of the latter, so he stayed where he was.

When the evening was well advanced, and Mrs. Douglass and her daughter were in a tremor of alarm, a servant was dispatched to the store, with orders to summon an officer and prosecute the search until good news was obtained. Visions of the icy Delaware, and of that loved girl drifting downward by reeking wharves beneath the grinding wheels of the steamers, bruised by the rollers of sailing ships, until it was tossed far out into the ocean—these, with other horrid pictures, surged through the brain of mother and daughter, during those terrible hours of waiting, hoping and praying.

The servant reached home at midnight, with the report that it was impossible to regain the least trace, nothing of the missing one. Wife and daughter would have gone distracted at this juncture but for the sudden apparition of the old gentleman himself, who walked into the hall with a laugh, said he didn't know it was so late, and wondered what they were all so alarmed about.

He explained that he had met an acquaintance with whom he held important business relations, and had accepted his invitation to go to his house and talk it over.
He gave a boy a quarter, with a note which he was to deliver at the residence of Mr. Douglass, who, supposing everything was understood, remained much later than he really intended.

This explanation was partly true and partly untrue. His wife noticed that he was pale and agitated, as though he had just passed through some thing of an exciting nature; but he protested that it was all imagination on her part, and became petulant when she insisted that some trouble had been on his mind for a fortnight past.
The wife was ill at ease, but she said nothing more on the subject. That night she said but little, but lay awake listening to the curious mutterings of her husband, as he flung himself about in his feverish slumber. Persons at such times talk thickly and brokenly, and there was much she could not catch; but among other disordered expressions were the following:

"One hundred into 10,000—yes—it is done—the President himself wouldn't suspect—will see you again—it's 10,000 now!" Mrs. Douglass could not imagine what the allusions meant, but she was troubled beyond measure.

The following evening she received a note from her husband, saying that he would be detained again till a late hour, to complete the business of the night before; but it would be all right, and they should feel no apprehension at all.

About the time this brief missive reached its destination, Joseph Douglass was seated in a private room at the Continental, listening to and looking into the explanations and illustrations of a certain apparatus and ad, of which Professor Bulgebill was the inventor.

The Professor was an oily, clerical-looking gentleman, dressed in sumner garments of "an admired fashion, who always kept his tail bat on his head while talking, whose face was thin and clean-shaven, chain and nose long, and who could rattle off sentences like a circular saw going through a pine board.

"There!" said he, flinging down a couple of railroad bonds, "tell me which has been raised."

Douglass picked them up one after the other, and adjusting his spectacles, examined each with the minutest care.
"It's hard to tell," he finally said; "but, if I were forced to make a guess, I should say that one."

Professor Bulgebill lifted it again, and looked at a private mark of his own on the back. He claimed that that was the only way in which he could determine the matter.

"The Professor laughed so hard that it looked as if he would shake his head off.
"Three times out of four you've gone wrong.
Now you'll admit that there's something in it."

"It is astounding," said the merchant.
"An acid which obliterates ink so utterly as does that, is capable of demoralizing the whole business interests of the country."

"Precisely!" chimed in the Professor, with one of his tremendous grins: "and that's why every man of business should buy my patent Anti-inking, Anti-changing, Sure-Preventer, Universal Champion Safety Bond and Check Indicator. Here's a bond that has passed through it, and there's where I've tied the acid on it. A perfect failure, you see—blurred and blotted so that a blind man would detect the attempt."

"What is the use of this apparatus of yours, so long as this peculiar acid which you have invented is not manufactured? It is your invention, and you have it in your hands to render the Anti-inking etc., machine unnecessary, by taking care that the dangerous acid is not allowed to get into the hands of others."

Once more the clerical looking Professor indulged in his enormous smile.
"Too late. The partner to whom I revealed the secret sold it out to an unprin-ciple forger, and the two have made an independent fortune in a few months. It is in use all over the country, and the holders of bonds have only one remedy, and that is of the simplest character—that is the patent Anti-inking, Anti-changing, Sure-Preventer, Universal Champion Safety Bond and Check Indicator. You see it is made like a modern clothes iron. You run your bond through it, and there is a preparation upon the rollers which renders the paper proof against the action of the acid."

"I will take the acid with me, and experiment a little more by daylight, to prove the matter further. If I deem it worth while to purchase your patent, I will drop you a check to-morrow."

And with this understanding, and with the exchange of a few unimportant words, they separated.

Mr. Douglass, instead of going home, returned to his store and went back into his private office, telling the watchman to allow no person to enter under any circumstances. It was hardly to be expected that any one would apply at that hour, but the merchant was afraid of shadows.

Alone with himself, where it was certain no human eye could see him, he opened the door of his safe, and from among his papers drew out a railroad bond of the denomination of $100.

Spreading it out before him, he held it down with paper weights, and then took the glass stopper out of the small vial of acid. The camel's hair brush was produced, and then he was ready to make a practical test of the dangerous acid.

But the merchant had done this much more than once before, and his heart failed him at the critical points. He had borrowed the bottle of acid a half dozen times, and Professor Bulgebill had pestered him for weeks.

It seems as if Satan knows just when and where and how to push his inroads, and it so happened that at the time the inventor submitted his acid, Douglass was in distressing financial straits. The depression and universal prostration in business had put the screws to him, as they were never put before in all his long mercantile career.

The Christmas holidays were close at hand, and in accordance with a beautiful custom kept from the infancy of his eldest child, he had arranged to give Esther and each of the boys a handsome present.

To the girl it was to be a diamond necklace, which, in fact, was already at the house, carefully hidden away by the mother, there to await the joyous Christmas morning.

Bob, who was close upon his marriage, was to be presented with a handsome house; Frank's $500 gold watch was lying in pearls with the diamonds.

All these together ran well up into the thousands; besides which the merchant had more of his paper falling due at the beginning of the year than he could provide for.

Why not raise this one hundred bond to ten thousand, put it up as collateral and borrow what he needed? There was scarcely a possibility of the deception being discovered for months, and probably not for years. It would bridge over the chasm, and give him just the needed opportunity to "turn himself." He would take up his note, withdraw and destroy the bond, and where could be the harm?

Such was the form in which the appalling temptation presented itself to the merchant. He had argued with himself until he was convinced; but when he advanced resolutely to the brink, he hesitated and drew back.

And now again he hesitated, and, leaning his head on his hand, closed his eyes, while the contest between Temptation and Conscience went on. It was a still, small voice, but it was distinct all the time, and the heart of sophistry, from Temptation, but the latter gained his ear, and by and by the victory was won.

With compressed lips, a gleaming eye, and a steady hand, the act was made to do its work. Under the skillful manipulations, the $100 bond speedily became $10,000, and returning it to his safe, he took a genuine smaller one, he walked home.

But the horrors of that walk! It seemed to him that every man he encountered looked suspiciously upon him. He sneaked like a burglar into his room. When he undertook to say his prayers, the words stuck in his throat, and he tossed the night through in a most pitiable state of unrest and fear. Toward morning, having resolved that his first act, upon reaching his store, should be the destruction of the fraudulent bond, he fell into a fitful slumber.

With the sunshine and the bustle of the morning, however, his courage seemed to return, and he sent for the check, as promised, to Prof. Balch. Then, after fortifying himself with a glass of brandy, he showed the bond into a huge envelope, marked the back, and walked directly to the banking office of his friend, Jared Jayne.

"Here's a bond, Jared, of the Broom-handle and Perkins Road, for $10,000, as collateral for my note at sixty days for $5,000. Can you accommodate me?"

"Glad to do so at any time, Joseph," replied the banker, pulling the bond part way out, merely glancing at it and pushing it back. "I will give you my check—but what else you? You look ill."

"I have been a little out of sorts," replied the merchant, nervously brushing his forehead. "But it's nothing."

The check was passed over, and Douglass departed, with the intention of depositing it in the bank.

But when he started up the steps, there seemed to be such a sinking within, that he started under the momentary belief that paralysis had overtaken him.

"It is conscience," he muttered, "smiting me as a giant."

And with a shudder he turned about and returned to his store, which closed early.

That was the 24th of December, and Joseph Douglass when he went home was one of the most miserable men that walked the earth.

"I'm a thorough going scoundrel," he muttered, "I have been honest simply because I haven't been tempted heretofore. Professor Balch will come along with his infernal contrivance, and I buy it solely for dishonest purposes. So now I'm lost. Put them on short allowance for a day, and every one of them will steal. Well, I've gone too far to retreat! The boys are home, and the presents will be in their hands in the morning. Next week I will arrange to tide things over for a couple of months, and trust to luck in the meantime."

In the joy of the family reunion on Christmas Eve, the miserable father was oblivious of his wretchedness for the time. Bob and Frank and Esther and the mother were so overflowing with fun and exuberant spirits, there was no resisting it. The old man laughed out loud once, and then stopped, seared at the sound.

But mirth and jollity reigned supreme that evening, and there came minutes when the merchant forgot the weight of woe which had added ten years to his age within the last week or two.

It was well into the night, and preparations were making for retiring, when the door-bell was so sharply jingled that everybody was alarmed. A minute later the servant announced that Mr. Jayne was in the parlor, desiring to see Mr. Douglass.

The heart of the merchant stood still, and everything went wrong before his eyes. "I made some blunder in the alteration, and he has detected. To-morrow I will spend in jail. God pity me, for man won't."

By an extraordinary effort he rose to his feet, and, choking down the emotion, passed into the hall. His face was so death-like that his family noticed it, though nothing was said until he was out of the room.

The heart that had paused was now throbbing so terrifically that he was fearful he would drop dead on his way through the hall.

"I will appeal to him, for old friendship's sake, to spare me," was the thought of the merchant. "I will make it right in some way. I will give up the house and my business. I will do all—"

"How do you do to-night, Joe?" said the banker, cordially grasping his hand. "You must excuse me for dropping in at such a time, but I was on my way to my bachelor apartments, when I noticed the lights, and knew from the noise that you were all up, by a large majority. I merely wanted to remind you that you made a little mistake about that bond you left me yesterday—What's the matter, Joe?"

The two were standing when the merchant sank into his chair so suddenly and with such a gasp that his visitor was frightened.

"It's all over now," thought the old man, who opened his eyes to make his appeal for mercy, but he could not just yet.

"The mistake is simply this," continued the banker, drawing some documents from his pocket. "You thought you gave me a 10,000 bond, when it was only a hundred. You must have placed the wrong one in the envelope."

The merchant stared at the paper for a full minute without speaking. Then he saw the banker had spoken the truth. The bond which was delivered to Jayne was genuine, though only one-hundredth of the denomination the owner represented.

That fraudulent or altered bond was still in the safe of the merchant's office. In his hurry and confusion he had changed them. "Thank God!" was the ejaculation that came from the heart and paused at the lips.

The guardian angel who was hovering at his elbow, and whom he had bidden depart, had only veiled her face a moment in sorrow. When the trembling hand of the merchant was outstretched to the woe, that shadowy arm, unseen and unknown, intercepted, and bemoiled in the eyes of the world he was guiltless, though they were. One who saw and knew all things.

"Of course it was a mere oversight," added the banker in such a heavy tone that the merchant could not be suspected;

"and you can drop in on Friday and make the exchange."

"Have you my note with you?"

"Yes; the papers are all here in the same envelope."

"Here is your check, which I did not deposit to-day, and don't think I'll need it. I'll trade papers with you, and we'll be even. And now come out to see the folks."

The banker was made, and the bachelor banker went out and had a laugh and exchanged greetings with the family.

While this was going on he managed to slip a little parcel unseen into the hands of his wife. It was for Joe who had no suspicion of such a thing.

Oh, the sweetness of that night's sleep! What a mountain load was lifted from the merchant's heart! How he shuddered and thanked God over and over again that he had drawn back from the appalling abyss over which he was dangling!

On the morning the children (as the parents always called them) got their presents. Either had her diamonds, Bob his deed for his house, and Frank his watch; but the old gentleman discovered unexpectedly something to his credit.

First there was a $1,000 check from the bachelor banker; then there was precisely the same amount, which his wife had steadily swindled him out of in small amounts during the year, solely for the pleasure of restoring it to him in a lump.

And then, again, Bob, by some means or other, had learned a few months before, that the old gentleman was hard pressed, and he and Frank arranged to give him something solid.

Bob brought $3,000, and the younger brother added $2,000 to it, all footing up considerably more than the check returned to the banker.

Before sunset on Christmas day, that "raised" bond was burned to ashes, and Joseph Douglass thanked heaven for showing him a thousandfold more mercy than he deserved.

The moral of this sketch is not that if one undertakes to "raise" a check or bond, he will be likely to receive something substantial from his friends.

The real moral was recently furnished by William C. Gilman, who went into that business some time since. To-day he is in Sing Sing, his wife is in the insane asylum, and his children are divided among the relatives. Is any more moral needed?

The Late Bev. Douglas.
 Washington Correspondence Boston Herald.
 The late Hon. B. B. Douglas, of Virginia, is said by those who knew him well, to have been in his day one of the most brilliant men of his State. In the power to grapple with legal questions and in skill as a debater he had few equals and no superiors. His physique was of the strongest and his long and terrible periods of intoxication seemed to have no effect in diminishing his strength. Many stories are told of his physical strength. Among others is one of the last campaign. His competitor made an allusion which touched old Bev's Virginia sense of honor. The next moment the speaker was shot from the tribune by a vigorous blow from Douglas.
 The unfortunate man had an arm broken, but Bev was not injured in the least. In his cups he was an exceedingly dangerous man. On one or two occasions last year he visited the reporters gallery for the purpose of chastising some writer whom he imagined had put a slight on him.

Drinking in the South.
 Mobile (Ala.) Register.
 In Virginia there is method and order in drinking. The climate being cooler, the blood is not so thick, and hence the necessity for drinks every hour is not so urgent. There is also more economy in Virginia, where the close methods of the regions of hog and hominy are observed.
 Here in Alabama we drink in winter to keep warm, and in summer to keep cool.
 In the city we drink to be sociable, and show that we are men about town; and in the country we drink to keep off chills and to cure snake bites. We are opposed to the continual drinking which exists in Russia and other parts of the barbarous world, but do not object to a cocktail when we get up, a snifter just before breakfast, a throat clearer just after breakfast, a lunch-er at 12 o'clock, two or three sociables between 12 and dinner, a bottle of wine or good whiskey straight at dinner. After dinner, having been thus abstemious during the business hours, we open ourselves a little and drop in at the saloons and clubs to see how political affairs are moving. If the country is in danger, or if we find it popular to abuse a good neighbor for the benefit of a faction, the matter can be better discussed over a drink or so. The judgment has been thus obtunded and operations more readily formed over the fumes of whisky-punch. We become more eloquent, and express our opinions with that emphasis of statement which marks the free American citizen.

Washburne Talked off for President.
 To the Editor of the New York Sun: I second the nomination of Washburne, of Illinois, as Republican candidate for the next President. I belong to the 500,000 voters of the United States who vote as they please, and think best to vote for the good of the country. I gave my first vote in 1828 for Andrew Jackson, who was an honest man. I voted for Grant for his first term, and got heartily sick of him before the four years were ended, and did not vote at all at his second term. Greeley was an honest and able man, but his political views and my own were so far apart I had to abstain from voting. I could not vote for Grant, and, in spite of all the fuss made about him in Europe, I think no better of him to-day than I did then. He degraded political life while President.
 Mr. Washburne I have never seen. I only know him from what I have read and heard of him. I voted for Tilden, but I should prefer Washburne. As for the parties there is not a cent to choose between them. I did think, and had a right to think, that the principles of the Democrats were on all questions of political economy sounder than Republicans. But, alas! I look at their doings in Congress since we 500,000 independent voters put them in power. Look at Fernando Wood's tariff and their votes for paper money.
 I did want very much to get complete control of the Government for the Democrats, and uncover the rascalities of the Republicans, so long in office. The majority of voters elected Tilden, but we got cheated out of his election, and the rascalities of the Republicans still remain uncovered. If the Republicans nominate Washburne I think independent voters will generally vote for him.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Established 1851.

The position of the foremost Republican newspaper in the United States will be sustained by The New York Times by the same policy in virtue of which that position has been attained.
 The Times will continue to place fidelity to the interests of the Republic above the pursuit of personal aim or private ambition, and will steadily uphold the use of any party may be measured by the extent of its devotion to the honor and welfare of the country.
 In the future, as in the past, the attitude of The Times will be that of independence within the Republican Party. The maintenance of the national credit; the eradication of the public service; the advocacy of all reasonable projects of fiscal reform; rigid economy in public expenditures; opposition to subsidies and corporate influence in the management of the Government; it will be in all its forms, and the preservation of equal rights to all citizens, North and South, will be the salient points of the policy of this Times.

The Times will continue to be distinguished as an impartial, candid and carefully edited newspaper. The acknowledged excellence and fairness of its correspondence by mail and telegraph from all parts of the world, will be adequately maintained, and its facilities for collecting domestic and foreign news will be expanded to meet the increasing demand of our time.

In the sphere of literary and artistic criticism, of scientific, social, and general discussion, The Times will address itself, heretofore, to the appreciation of the educated and intelligent classes of the American people. It will be lively without being sensational, aggressive without being coarse; at all times it will strive to be strict and independent in the championship of the right.
 No theories subversive of the principles on which the sacredness of family ties, and the existence of society alike repose will be promulgated in its columns.

The Times rejects all advertisements of lotteries, of quacks and medical pretenders, and of all other agencies by which the insidious poison of vice is disseminated throughout society. It will be in the future, as in the past, a newspaper especially adapted for family reading.

The Weekly Times, containing selected editorial on topics of national and general interest from the columns of the daily issue, as well as a concise summary of political, social, and foreign news, besides other features which recommend it to all classes of readers, is a paper admirably fitted to circulate in every portion of the United States. It will be the aim of its conductors to use every means, not only to maintain its well-earned currency, but to make its popularity still more decided.

In consequence of the great snow storm which prevailed in the East, she was nearly a week on the road, having experienced considerable difficulty in passing through snow drifts on the New York Central.

NEW CLOTHES FOR THE VETS.
The Janesville Veterans at their meeting last evening awarded to A. & F. Sonneck the contract for furnishing them with their new uniforms. The suits are to be dark blue, trimmed with light blue, as already described in the Gazette. The Veterans will present a soldierly appearance when thus clothed. Their contract is in good hands, and they may rest assured that the new clothes will be such as will compare favorably with those worn by any company in the State.

HORTICULTURISTS.
At the meeting of the Rock County Horticultural Society last evening the Treasurer reported a balance of $30 on hand. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

Treasurer—D. E. Pfeiffer.

F. S. Lawrence and George J. Kellogg were elected to represent the Society at the meeting of the State Horticultural Society.

THE CONCERT TO-NIGHT.
Remember the concert of the Red Hussars at the Opera house this evening. The Band will present a musical treat worthy of a very liberal patronage. They come here with flattering notices from the press and from the musical critics of the various places which they have visited, and will doubtless give a treat which will be highly enjoyable.

The Fond du Lac Commonwealth says of their concert in that place:

Those who did not attend the grand concert of the Red Hussar Band and Orchestra at Armory Hall last night can form but a faint idea of the musical treat which was missed. Never has Armory Hall been filled with sweeter sounds, and more perfect harmony. The exquisite music of a score of violins, accompanied by brass instruments, the flute, zither, violoncello and other instruments was entrancing. It is of a high order, artistic and grand. The Red Hussars' last appearance in the city, to-night, should be greeted with a large audience. Fond du Lac is not often the recipient of so great a musical feast.

LOCKED UP FOR LIFE.

Sentence Passed upon Mrs. Mack by the Court To-day.

How She is to Commemorate the Day on which She Murdered Her Husband.

Judge Conger's Remarks to the Woman in Black.

Affidavits not Strong Enough to Secure a New Trial.

The Only Hope now is in the Supreme Court.

The arguments on the motion for a new trial in the Mack murder case were commenced yesterday afternoon before Judge Conger. Mrs. Mack's attorneys, Mr. John Winans and Mr. O. H. Fethers, based their motion on the claim that three of the jurymen were disqualified, having previously expressed an opinion. They also based the motion on the minutes in the case, and moved an arrest of judgment on the ground that the information as filed was not sufficient, it not being framed according to the statutes, and failed to charge that there was any premeditation in the murder.

There were several affidavits presented to show that three of the jury, Calvin Crow, Henry Phillips and Eric Horgan, had a previous bias. The affidavit of A. S. Carver stated that Horgan once said "she was sure of Waupun." Isaac Parker's affidavit was to the effect that Crow had told him that "Mrs. Mack and the hired man had killed Mack and they ought to be hung." Cornelius Vankuren made an affidavit that Phillips had said in talk of the case that "he wished there was hanging in this State." George M. Gooch swore that Phillips had said he wanted to get on the case. Mrs. Belinda Mack made an affidavit that she did not know these men were prejudiced until after the trial. The affidavits of the attorneys and the copy of the short-hand reporter's notes covering the examination and acceptance of said jurors were also presented.

In behalf of the State Mr. Bennett read several affidavits, the first of which was by Mr. G. M. Gooch who gave some explanations of the conversation he had with Phillips. The latter was coming to the Court House a few minutes before the afternoon session, and Gooch was walking along with him. Phillips had been drawn in the morning as a juror, and examined by the judge, but not by the attorneys. Phillips told Gooch that he was in a hurry as he wanted to get there on time to be on the case. He had seen Phillips very frequently during the summer but had never heard Mr. Phillips express any opinion on the Mack case.

Henry Phillips made an affidavit that he had no recollection of having any talk with Vankuren about the Mack case. Vankuren once asked him if he expected to be on the case, and he said he didn't know. The statement Vankuren made about hanging was a sheer fabrication. He had never formed or expressed any opinion. He told Gooch as they were going to the Court House that he had got to hurry, for he wanted to be there in time, but never expressed any desire to serve on the jury.

Abel Barlow's affidavit was to the effect that Vankuren received a letter from Attorney Winans asking him to come to Janesville, as he knew something about the Mack case, and if he came he would be compensated. Vankuren could not read all the letter and so brought it to Barlow to read. He heard Vankuren's wife ask him what he knew about the case, and he replied that "he like a fool had got to talking in a crowd about something that some one of the jurors had said, and he supposed they had got hold of it." He at first said he would not go unless he was subpoenaed, but finally said that perhaps Mr. Winans would give him enough to get a new pair of boots.

Calvin S. Crow's affidavit was presented to the effect that he never had any conversation with Parker about the Mack case.

E. W. Childs made an affidavit that he heard Parker say that Mr. Barnard had been drawn as a juror, and that Barnard had told him that "Mrs. Mack and the hired man ought to be hung, as they had murdered Mack." After Parker had made the affidavit that it was Crow who said this, Childs called his attention to it and Parker then denied that he had ever told him that it was Barnard who had said this, and insisted he told him it was Crow.

Erick N. Horgan made an affidavit denying all that Carver had alleged concerning his bias.

O. P. Gaarder's affidavit was presented, avowing that Carver had told him that he did not remember of ever hearing the case mentioned while he was thrashing at Horgan's, but that one day Horgan came to his place looking for a colt, and they were talking about coming to Janesville. Horgan told Carver that Thursday would be a good day to go, as they could hear the Mack case. Carver remarked "Well, she's pretty sure of Waupun, isn't she?" to which Carver said that Horgan replied "well, may be" or "perhaps."

Mr. Winans spent most of the afternoon and most of this morning in presenting the points on which the motion was based.

The Court decided however not to grant the motion, being convinced that there were no errors in the proceedings, which would warrant a new trial.

District Attorney Sale then moved that the sentence of the Court be passed upon the defendant.

Mr. Fethers moved that sentence be suspended until the Supreme Court could pass upon the case.

The Court remarked that he could not do this, and read the provisions of the statutes. After the attorneys had consulted and advised with the Court, they decided to make no further objections to the sentence being passed. Judge Conger suggested to the Sheriff that the defendant should be kept here in jail for a few days until her attorneys could have time to apply to some Justice of the Supreme Court for a stay of proceedings. The Court decided that sentence should be passed.

Mrs. Mack, who had been sitting in her old place near the steam heater during all the morning's proceedings, kept her head bowed and her face closely veiled. Outside the rail there were but few spectators, it not being generally known that a scene of such marked interest was to transpire. She showed little emotion, and aside from the peculiar position in which she sat there was no indication that she took much notice of what was passing. She seemed to be a quiver or a tremor, and she sat there like a statue. The spectators sat in a death silence as the sentence was imposed. It was listened to as though each word was dust to dust falling upon the coffin which was to forever hide her from the world.

The Court—"I understand that the defendant is ill, and I will not therefore request her to rise. Is there anything which you desire to say, Mrs. Mack?"

The figure in black moved not, and a distressing silence followed. The Court suggested to Mr. Fethers to see whether she desired to make any statement. That attorney walked to where she sat, and after a minute's whispered conference remarked "She says, 'no.'"

A glass of water was given her, and after sipping it she bowed her head and Judge Conger proceeded to pass the solemn sentence which he couched in the following words:

Belinda Mack. The greatest crime known to the law, as well as the most heinous that could offend humanity, was charged upon you by the public prosecutor of this county in the discharge of his official duty. Upon that charge you have been tried before a jury of your county; a jury selected by your concurrence and assent from the great body of the people, because of their intelligence, impartiality, fairness and high character; and after such trial, extending through two long weeks of patient deliberation, most careful and searching examination and inquiry, you have been found guilty of the murder of your husband, George Mack, a murder so foul as to excite the passions and shock the senses, a crime so enormous that the hardest heart recoils from it with horror, and at which humanity stands aghast. No trial was ever conducted against a criminal, of whatever degree, with more fairness, nor did counsel ever bestow upon the cause of client greater ability, wiser care, sounder judgment or more laborious and devoted effort, than has been done by your counsel in this case. All the knowledge and fidelity which that counsel, which is wearing you slowly, but so surely, out? We don't ask you to take any chances on this remedy. If you have not tried it we urge you to get a bottle, and if after using one-half of it you find that it is doing you no good, you can return it and get your money back. S. E. Waterhouse, of Mazomanie, writes: "Three doses cured our little girl of one of the most aggravated colics. We would not be without it." Price 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. decidedly

Consumption Lurks in Every Cough.

Every home should be supplied with Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry. It induces the blood with its life-giving principle, and restores the system to its normal state of health to the various organs. Tonsils have been restored to perfect health after having been given up to die by physicians and friends. We have seen the fading and consumptive stricken youth renew his life under its benign action. We have seen the middle-aged, the old and feeble restored to the society of friends; denied association with children and parents, made the constant and companion of the invalid, and in a word, it is a medicine not to be dispensed with. It is a medicine that will not only remind you of the guilty past or point you to the way of repentance on account of it. If conscience be not dead within you, contrition and sorrow, in memory of the husband whose life you first hastened to the end of the service-man, and whose life you then cruelly took or aided in taking because it stood in the way through which your uncast desires were to be more fully gratified, must be, as they should be, your companions forever more.

Wretched and pitiable, indeed is your condition, as you are, and no words of mine can utter for the purpose of adding to your subject wretchedness. I would only have you realize how very atrocious is your crime, that repentance and contrition for it may be early, continuous, sincere and abiding. I would have you feel that to murder, deliberate and cold-blooded, the man whom you were bound by every vow to love, that his rightful place might be occupied by your companion in crime, upon whom you had already lavished your lecherous affections, is a crime most atrocious in the sight of man, and incomparably atrocious in the sight of God.

The sentence of the Court and of the law is that you, Belinda Mack, be punished by confinement at hard labor in the State prison of this State for the full period of your natural life, and that on the 13th day of each and every July during such term your imprisonment be solitary.

THE WEDDING BELLS.

BLADEN—BAINES.

Last evening there was a happy matrimonial event at the residence of Mr. William Barnes, near this city, it being the marriage of his daughter, Miss Mary Baines to Mr. William Bladen, of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. L. Royce, in accordance with the beautiful and impressive ritual of the Episcopal church. Mr. Levi Bliss served as groomsmen and Miss Lucinda Baines, of Chicago, as bridesmaid. About fifty of the friends of the contracting parties were present, and the occasion was a most happy beginning of what all hope and believe will be a long life of wedded joy. Mr. Bladen has been connected with Bassett, Bliss & Echlin, of this city, for some time, and is well known in both social and business circles. The bride also has a large circle of friends and acquaintances, and if an abundance of well wishes can prolong life or add to happiness, Mr. and Mrs. Bladen have a bright future before them.

REYNOLDS' RED RIBBONS.

Dr. Henry A. Reynolds, the originator of the red ribbon movement, and a temperance man who stands in the front rank, both as to ability and experience, will speak at the Congregational church next Sunday evening. The reputation which Dr. Reynolds has throughout the West will insure for him a large audience.

Our Tenure of Life

Depends in great measure upon our regard for or neglect of the laws of health. If we violate them we cannot expect to "make old bones." But that the span of existence allotted to a naturally delicate constitution, or one which has been shaken by disease may be materially lengthened, is a fact of which we have daily proof. The vivifying and restorative influence of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters upon a failing physique affords a striking illustration of the power of judicious medication to strengthen the hold on life. Restored digestion, complete assimilation, renewed appetite, sound repose, these are among the benefits conferred upon the debilitated by that supreme renovant. With a circulation enriched, a frame invigorated, and a nervous system tranquilized, the invalid, after a course of the Bitters, feels that his life-tenure is no longer the precarious thing that it was—that he may yet enjoy a "green old age."

Do Stop That Cough!

Why in the world don't you go to the drug store and get a bottle of Hale's Cough Cordial and Cough Syrup, which is wearing you slowly, but so surely, out? We don't ask you to take any chances on this remedy. If you have not tried it we urge you to get a bottle, and if after using one-half of it you find that it is doing you no good, you can return it and get your money back. S. E. Waterhouse, of Mazomanie, writes: "Three doses cured our little girl of one of the most aggravated colics. We would not be without it." Price 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. decidedly

Consumption Lurks in Every Cough.

Every home should be supplied with Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry. It induces the blood with its life-giving principle, and restores the system to its normal state of health to the various organs. Tonsils have been restored to perfect health after having been given up to die by physicians and friends. We have seen the fading and consumptive stricken youth renew his life under its benign action. We have seen the middle-aged, the old and feeble restored to the society of friends; denied association with children and parents, made the constant and companion of the invalid, and in a word, it is a medicine not to be dispensed with. It is a medicine that will not only remind you of the guilty past or point you to the way of repentance on account of it. If conscience be not dead within you, contrition and sorrow, in memory of the husband whose life you first hastened to the end of the service-man, and whose life you then cruelly took or aided in taking because it stood in the way through which your uncast desires were to be more fully gratified, must be, as they should be, your companions forever more.

Wretched and pitiable, indeed is your condition, as you are, and no words of mine can utter for the purpose of adding to your subject wretchedness. I would only have you realize how very atrocious is your crime, that repentance and contrition for it may be early, continuous, sincere and abiding. I would have you feel that to murder, deliberate and cold-blooded, the man whom you were bound by every vow to love, that his rightful place might be occupied by your companion in crime, upon whom you had already lavished your lecherous affections, is a crime most atrocious in the sight of man, and incomparably atrocious in the sight of God.

The sentence of the Court and of the law is that you, Belinda Mack, be punished by confinement at hard labor in the State prison of this State for the full period of your natural life, and that on the 13th day of each and every July during such term your imprisonment be solitary.

A Medicine Chest for 25 Cents.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a good cathartic. SWAYNE'S TARTAR AND SASSAPARILLA PILLS are prepared expressly to meet this necessity; being composed of purely vegetable ingredients, of which Podophyllin or Mandrake, Pine Tree Tar, Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock and other concentrated juices enter largely into their composition; the whole strength of which is extracted on an entirely new principle. They are mild in their operation, produce no griping, and are truly a valuable purgative agent, anti-bilious and cathartic medicine. They stimulate the liver to healthy action, cleanse the blood, and remove all impurities. Curing sick and nervous headache, dyspepsia or indigestion, bilious, intermittent, remittent and congestive fevers, languor, drowsiness, aching pains in the back, head, slight chills, with flushes of heat, female irregularities, and for a bilious and costive habit, no medicine is so prompt and effectual as Dr. SWAYNE'S TARTAR AND SASSAPARILLA PILLS. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got them, or will not procure them for you, we will forward them by mail on receipt of price, (in currency or postage stamps), 25 cents a box, or five boxes for $1.
